Army War College, 2009 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)320550226 Subject: Drug traffic -- Mexico -- Prevention. Excerpt: . . . individuals as diverse as electronic surveillance 19 experts and information-gathering prostitutes. The Congressional Research Service reports that the Zetas are now an increasingly sophisticated, three-tiered organization, with leaders and middlemen who coordinate contracts with petty criminals to carry out 20 street work. Zeta attacks are often marked by their complex, elaborate plans and execution. The Zetas have used the cell-phone signatures of their opponents to coordinate assassinations and kidnappings, and there are reports that they have penetrated the radio frequencies used 21 by Mexican law enforcement. The group has been known to use the sort of swarming tactics favored by the powerful gangs that control the Brazilian favelas, and in other cases has put its military experience to 22 use in more subtle ways. In 2007, Zetas disguised as soldiers infiltrated two police stations under the guise of a routine weapons inspection and murdered seven 23 government officials. In carrying out these attacks, the Zetas and their competitors...
